Q: Error running compiled Python script from Windows Command Line I'm attempting to run an executable Python script from the Windows cmd line. My script is in a .py file at C:\Python\Scripts and is supposed to be compiled like this: python setup.py install But running that as a command line item, as a normal user, results in the following error: python setup.py install running install running egg_info writing C:\Python\Scripts\setup.cfg to C:\Python\Scripts\setup.cfg writing top-level names to C:\Python\Scripts\setup.cfg writing regu-packages to C:\Python\Scripts\setup.cfg writing data-packages to C:\Python\Scripts\setup.cfg writing scripts to C:\Python\Scripts\setup.cfg error: The file to be installed is not specified, and can't be installed relative to script What could I be doing wrong? A: It is possible to make pip distribute packages for your version of Python. By default it copies your Python binaries and needed packages to the top of the Python install path so that it is available for other packages to use. This is a security feature to prevent
